Members appointed to new Health Community Councils

Health Minister Stephen Robertson has appointed community members to 36 new Health Community Councils around the state, following recommendations from the independent Health Quality and Complaints Commission.

These new advisory bodies replace the former district health councils, giving communities a more direct say in the performance and quality of local health services.

Council membership includes up to eight members and, wherever possible, at least one local general practitioner. Members are appointed for a period of up to four years.

Each council will meet at least once every two months.
