| Reason for Recall | microbial (E.coli) contamination |

| Recall Detection | The recall is the result of routine government testing |
| Pathogen | E.coli |
| Corrective Action taken | All remaining and retrieved stock will be transferred to the factory for disposal. Samples will be tested further in-house if needed. Raw milk testing will be reviewed. It is expected that the problem is confined to the Kefir. There have been no other NCs from other products. All TBCs are very low and no Coli have been detected. All cleaning verification is good and all maintenance is up to date. The E.coli detected at CML has been isolated and will be sent to Qld Health for serotyping. The next 3 batches of Kefir will be tested at CML prior to sale - 5 samples will be tested per batch I refer to the previous discussion with Andrew Wilson regarding E.coli and Klebsiella and survival in Kefir post-pasteurisation and fermentation. He suggested reducing the incidence on farm and reducing survival rate in production by increasing the holding tube time and trialling double HTST pasteurisation or using batch pasteurisation to increase the time of heating above 60°C. |
