

RTI #3901 – ‘Environmental Scanning’ undertaken at Forensic DNA Analysis (Forensic and Scientific Services) (in the years 2009 and 2010)

Contextual Information

Environmental monitoring is a standard component of the quality processes undertaken by Forensic DNA Analysis, Forensic and Scientific Services, Health Support Queensland, Department of Health.

Environmental Monitoring applies to all laboratory and examination areas in which processing of items requiring Forensic DNA Analysis is performed. Where equipment, consumables, work areas, clothing or staff come into contact with an exhibit/DNA sample, there is a possibility that DNA may transfer from these objects to another exhibit/DNA sample. Environmental sampling is used to monitor the levels of environmental DNA, facilitating the management of risk/s associated with DNA transfer and/or contamination of exhibits/DNA samples.

The purpose of environmental sampling is to monitor the environment for incidental/accidental DNA contamination (from staff, DNA samples, exhibits or other sources) to detect events that may detrimentally impact on sample processing/profiling within the Forensic DNA Analysis laboratory. It also assesses the efficacy of cleaning procedures within the Forensic DNA Analysis laboratories.

Environmental sampling is conducted on a monthly basis, usually before the deep clean (but after the routine daily clean).

Data source

The attached information is a tabulated representation of DNA profile graphs (electropherograms) which has been extracted from the AUSLAB pathology system. AUSLAB is a state-wide business critical, clinical support system used within Queensland Health, and is currently the largest public hospital pathology IT system within Australia. AUSLAB is the Laboratory Information System used during the processing of this matter and holds the information in relation to the receipt, storage and testing of forensic DNA samples.
